

The Wisconsin No Call Law should stay intact. If I want information from a business, I am certainly capable of using my telephone to contact them. They DO NOT have a right to use my telephone to interfere in my home, on my time. I pay the bill to use my telephone -- they don't -- so they have no "right" to use it as they please. If I discontinue use of a product or service I have made my choice about whether I am interested in doing business with them or not, and it should not then allow them to continue soliciting me to convince me that I really DO need them. As adult consumers, we are allowed to decide with which companies we do and DO NOT want to conduct our business.
